Charles Pavarini III Design Associates specializes in architecturally-based interior design. While many of its projects begin with new construction and full-scale renovations, the company sees most projects right through decoration and art selection to achieve a complete interior design concept.

Having been commissioned by a client of over 25 years standing to create the interiors for a mountain home, members of the firm travelled the entire North American East Coast purchasing a plethora of antiques. Unlike many properties on Forest Road in Vail, Colorado, the client wanted the home to feel like a warm and welcoming American ski lodge. It was to be devoid of pretension and replete with folk art and significant American memorabilia. It also had to reflect the outdoor activities for which the home would be used: canoeing, kayaking, skiing, fishing and hunting in the Colorado Rocky Mountains.

Complementing the overall theme, a windmill bought from a Kansas farm gave a powerful American design concept around which all textile and furniture schemes revolved. At least a dozen Navajo Indian blankets were purchased and overlapped in lieu of carpeting in the library and a fantastic collection of Black Forest pieces and antique American quilts are sprinkled throughout the three-storey home. Rare 19th century hooked rugs abound and all decorative wall finishes were mixed on-site to give a true feeling of the American wilderness.
